Allegations Bring About Change in CDC

By KATHARINE STOLTZFUS

Several allegations of e-mail snooping have brought about a temporary change in policy at UNO's Computing and Data Communications (CDC).

Richard Snowden, CDC director, said since the recent publicity, his department has stopped accessing e-mail or files under any circumstances.

"We are no longer looking at e-mail or files whether we're asked to or not," Snowden said at Sunday's meeting of the Vice Chancellor's Student Leadership Council. "We won't until we have a finite reading from University of Nebraska legal counsel."

Snowden said that to his knowledge, there have been only seven cases over the past several years where administrators have accessed e-mail.

According to Snowden, several cases involved harassment complaints and were carried out in conjunction with law enforcement or the office of Educational and Student Services.

In other cases, students were engaged in illegal or unethical behaviors, such as intercepting grades and developing for-profit software on the university network, he said.

Snowden pointed out that the only people who have access privileges to e-mail are Lloyd Hasche, assistant director of academic computing, and Dan Hoffman, academic systems administrator.

"I don't even have the privilege or the skills to access e-mail," he said.

Snowden said he recently has received a report from university legal counsel on the legality of accessing student e-mail. The report will be used in determining whether or not CDC's policy on student privacy will be changed.

"It is a very long document," he said. "There is very little case law on this issue, but in effect, the report says we have the right."

Richard Hoover, vice chancellor of Educational and Student Services, also present at the meeting, said he has forwarded a Student Senate resolution calling for an investigation into the allegations to UNO Chancellor Del Weber.

"The chancellor has indicated to me that he's going to ask the users' committee, which is made up of administrative and academic users, to investigate the situation," Hoover said.

"The results of that investigation will be indicated across the campus, and that should also help clear the air a bit."

Snowden said he felt the allegations may have come from disgruntled employees. He said he believed the incidents may have been blown out of proportion because privacy is an emotional issue.

"Nobody likes to believe that somebody's into their personal mail."

Pending the results of the policy review, Snowden said CDC will not access any student mail.

"Not until the legal opinion is fully researched," he said.

Eighth Grader Prospering at UNO

By JODI BOOKE

Mathew Penn-Boris is not your average eighth grader.

He enjoys acting, wrestling, football and track and he attends UNO.

Penn Boris began his college studies last semester at the ripe old age of 13 with a Writer's Workshop class. Now 14, he is taking his second college course, World Civilizations in which he is earning a grade of around an A- or B+.

"I took the SAT in seventh grade," Penn Boris said, "and I won a scholarship to take a class at UNO because I had an extremely high verbal score."

He received a score of 600 in the verbal portion and 480 in math.

Penn Boris' parents, Cindy Penn and Walter Boris knew their first-born was special at an early age.

"He always liked to talk," Boris said.

"When he was 3 1/2, we enrolled him in preschool. After he was in class a couple of months, the teacher told us he was being disruptive.

"She said she thought he wasn't being challenged enough, so they moved him to the next older class and he did very well."

Boris said they never pushed their son to excel. "We read to him a lot when he was little," he said. "Reading is the key."

Even now, Penn Boris says reading is one of his favorite pastimes. Two of his favorite authors are David Eddings and Edward Gorey.

"I'm actually getting better grades in college than I am in regular school," he said.

"Regular school" for Penn Boris is King Science, where his favorite class is Spanish.

While Penn Boris has proven to be college material, he said if he had the chance, he would not skip the rest of junior high and high school.

"I wouldn't have as much background going to college as everybody else does," Penn Boris said, "and there would be a great chance that I'd miss a lot."

"I'd really be out of my peer group."

Outside of academics, Penn Boris is actively involved in community theater. Last week he was busy working in Emmy Gifford Children's Theater's production of "The Wizard of Oz."

"I really enjoy being up on stage. I don't really have any stage fright at all," Penn Boris said. "It's kind of nice to be in the spotlight."

That lack of stage fright follows Penn Boris to the UNO campus. He said he doesn't feel out of place being the youngest student at UNO.

"Everybody's really nice here."

Penn Boris's future is just as uncertain as most 14-year-olds. He plans on going to college "somewhere" after high school and possibly getting a liberal arts degree.

He has aspirations to be either an actor, a writer, a journalist or to combine all of the above working in public relations.

"I think foreign service would be kind of neat."

Student Senate Calls For Separate College

By VERONICA BURGHER

The Student Senate wrapped up the spring semester Thursday by unanimously passing a resolution endorsing the establishment of an engineering college at UNO.

The resolution was delayed pending a report from four consultants hired by the Nebraska Board of Regents to assess the state's engineering needs, said Student President/Regent Matt Schulz, one of the bill's sponsors.

"Now the report has come down," Schulz said, "thankfully in our favor, with all four consultants recommending that we proceed with the development of a separate engineering college here in Omaha."

An engineering college in Omaha will benefit the whole state, Schulz said.

Executive Treasurer Susan Greenslate told the senate that the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Academic Senate recently passed a resolution condemning a separate engineering college at UNO.

"Did they give a reason?" Sen. David Varney asked. "Or is it just because they are threatened by us?"

Schulz said although fear of UNO with its own engineering college may be an underlying reason, the public explanation is that there is no need for duplicating the services.

"To that I would say, we have an Arts and Sciences College in Lincoln and one in Omaha," Schulz said.

In other business:

—The senate passed a resolution to appropriate $1,000 to the Seed Money Account. The original $3,000 in the budget request was removed during the budget hearing April 7.

Student Programming Organization distributes the money to student organizations for the purpose of fund-raising. The organizations can apply for a maximum of $300 once every four years.

• A resolution passed approving the purchase of a new electric wheelchair for the Disabled Student Agency.

• Tracey Cullan was reappointed to a graduate senate seat.

• The senate accepted the constitution for Alpha Eta Rho, a co-educational aviation fraternity.

• Joleen Zabawa was named director of the Women's Resource Center.

• Jim Watson was appointed senator of the College of Fine Arts.

• Jennifer Szynskie was appointed Student Court Justice.

Ashford Speaks to Senate

By VERONICA BURGHER

State Senator Brad Ashford (R) reminisced about UNO's past and looked to its future during a visit to the Student Senate on Thursday.

"Over the last eight years," Ashford said, "we had some good years and some tough years."

During the first four years of his term, Ashford said, UNO benefited from economic prosperity. The system was prosperous enough that the money to construct the Fine Arts Building came from the general budget fund and not cigarette taxes, he said.

Even in bad economic times, Ashford said he was committed to preserving the level of quality faculty and staff at UNO. As member of the appropriations committee, he said his goal was to keep UNO's salaries competitive with other schools.

"Even though we've been cutting state government, we've been able to add faculty at UNO," Ashford said.

Ashford's latest endeavor has been working to establish a separate engineering college at UNO.

"That's a very exciting opportunity for UNO," he said. "There are so many things on the launching pad, ready to go forward."

Recently, the state Legislature passed a motion requiring the University of Nebraska system to appropriate $200,000 to hire new engineering faculty at UNO.

"I absolutely believe we need a separate engineering college on the UNO campus, with a separate dean and a separate administration," Ashford said. "The needs here are endless for graduates of engineering."

Whatever the future holds for UNO, Ashford said he regrets he won't be in the Legislature to directly guide it. He is leaving to pursue other political aspirations.

"UNO is going to have to be down there fighting hard for its share of the university appropriations," Ashford said. "But I think it is well positioned."

Student President/Regent Matt Schulz said the senate usually does not allow campaigning politicians to come and speak. He made an exception for Ashford because he is the senator for UNO's district.

"He has been a good state senator for UNO," Schulz said.

Cancer Is Topic of Heartland Summit

By Susan McElligott

Thirteen years ago, Zora Kramer Brown discovered a tiny lump in her breast. Detecting this early sign of cancer saved her life.

Brown, founder and Chairperson of the Cancer Awareness Program Services and Breast Cancer Awareness Resource Committee, was the keynote speaker of the Heartland Leadership Summit Friday at the Peter Kiewit Conference Center.

Breast cancer is a family affair for Brown. She said her grandmother, mother and three of her sisters have had the disease.

Retiring UNO Pastor Delivers Last Lecture

By Becky Bohan

How do I love thee?

This is the question Darrel Berg, retiring campus pastor, tried to answer at the United Christian Ministries in Higher Education's Last Lecture Series held Thursday in the Student Center.

The philosophy behind the Last Lecture Series has been to provide an opportunity for faculty to present a brief lecture as if it were their last lecture.

In Berg's case, it was his last lecture. After four years at UNO, he is retiring as UNO's campus pastor.

Berg quoted from Elizabeth Barrett Browning when he recited the famous question. "How do I love thee? Let me count the ways."

"I have been thinking about these lines because you are not suppose to love an institution," he said. "It is all right to love an individual, but what kind of human being could love an institution."

Among the institutions Berg said he loved were the First Congregational Church in Council Bluffs and UNO.

"I think one reason I love UNO is that it's a little brother. In a sense, UNO is the younger brother in the university system," he said. "It's only had 26 years of history in the state university system. I tend to identify with younger brothers and sometimes with little guys."

Berg said he believes a feeling of acceptance, spontaneity and friendliness is at a maximum at UNO.

"It's a kind of community. It really is. Even though we don't have dorms. We don't have a lot of things that old residential campuses have," he said. "We do have this feeling of community between the faculty and staff and the students."

Berg is known for overseeing many programs at UNO including The Last Lecture Series, Author Series, Christian Forums, Bible Study, Interfaith Breakfast and weekly pizza and movie nights.

Berg said ministry was the main objective for every young person in his church when he was growing up in Iowa. He also said girls were pushed toward being religious education directors.

"Today, the girls can have an ambition to go into the ministry and be ordained. It's very encouraging."

Forty percent of students are women in Methodist Seminaries, Berg said.

"These women are not studying how to run Sunday school," he said, "their studying how to be senior pastors of churches."

Among Berg's accomplishments include writing the book "A Peace Of Blue Sky," running for the U.S. House of Representatives in 1972, co-hosting the weekly ETV Bookshelf Program, producing a long play record "The Day Tomorrow Began" and once serving as an alternate preacher on the KFAB "Methodist Hour."

During Berg's lecture, he shared four statements of his beliefs.

"In the first place, I believe God is our creator and all human beings are brothers and sisters," he said. "That is the radical truth of Jesus, that is the truth of Mohammed, that is the truth of the prophets of Israel."

"I believe that institutions are made for individuals. Not individuals for institutions. But the basic truth of Jesus in his words the Sabbath was made for man not man for Sabbath."

Berg's last two beliefs were adapted from Houston Smith's book "Religious of Mankind."

"The future of any society is directly dependent upon the justice of it's social order," he said.

Of his last belief, Berg said, "Individuals have a responsibility for the condition of society, as well as for the tidiness of their personal behavior."

Students Put Voices to Work

By Heidi Hermanson

Rich Jones and Julie McKnight love to talk.

They put their verbal prowess to good use as members of UNO's Maverick Forensics team.

Recently, the UNO team of Jones and McKnight ranked 30th out of 105 colleges at the American Forensics National Tournament, an impressive feat considering the team consisted solely of the two of them.

Forensics is defined as competitive public speaking and can be broken down into several categories. These include informative and persuasive speeches, impromptu and extemporaneous speaking, debating and oral interpretation.

Jones and McKnight placed seventh in the nation in the "dramatic duo interpretation," a subdivision of the oral interpretation category.

The dramatic duo interpretation involves two people doing part of a play. Jones and McKnight did a 10-minute excerpt of the play "Careless Love" by John Olive.

"The duo is the most fun because of the interaction between the two people," said McKnight, a 21-year-old speech communication major.

"It's always fun to find a different part of you and put it into a character," said Jones, 22, a speech/theatre and secondary education major.

Students are judged on a variety of factors including vocal clarity, creativity, eye contact, poise and polish, as well as their ability to keep the

Wish the Best for All and Fulfill Role as Thinker

This could be the one column I absolutely hate to write, yet for some or many of you, it could be the column you couldn't wait to read.

This may be my final column in this industrious student newspaper. Depending on whether or not the next editor wishes for me to come back, or if I just choose to give it up, this may be it.

I can't speak for the rest of the writers who have shared this page with me, but I take column writing seriously. Even more so than I do my own studies. With the position of columnist comes a responsibility to not only one's self, but also the newspaper and its audience.

This column does not exist to tell people how they should feel or what they should do, it merely exists for the sake of suggestion. If along the way someone is enlightened, entertained or enraged, then the columnist has achieved his or her goal.

We exist to try and get you to think. What you decide to do after reading such journalistic babble is up to you.

One misconception I would like to clear up is the foolish belief held by some that columnists have no business expressing their opinion in a newspaper.

"A newspaper is supposed to be unbiased in its reporting letting the readers make up their own minds," the masses cry out. The masses are half right.

A newspaper has many roles besides just reporting the news in an unbiased manner — although objective writing and reporting is at the forefront of a paper's responsibility. It is also the role of a newspaper to take a stand on issues which affect the public.

This in no way compromises the objective reporting since columns and editorials are clearly marked as opinionated articles. It takes the truly enlightened to take the time to read the little disclaimer at the top of this page before crying about media bias.

You're not always going to like what you read in the Gateway just as the Gateway is not going to always like the criticism it takes from the public. However, the Gateway, nor any other newspaper, exists to only report on the positive side of life or just "good news."

This just in, bad things happen too.

It's now time to get back to the responsibility I feel toward you, the reading public. Many people have asked me what I would write about for my final (?) column. Common suggestions ranged from blasting the administration to "put in a bunch of cuss words and see if they run it."

During my nine hour trip back from St. Louis, I kept thinking of what great advice can I leave for the students of UNO? Funny, I kept arriving at the same answer, who cares?

It's not up to me or anyone else to help advise you on what to do in life. You're an adult, make your own decisions and stay out of my way in traffic.

Oops, I know, too cynical. Most Gateway readers can't handle negative vibes. I'm sorry.

If I were to make a suggestion to everyone on campus, or everyone on the earth, I would have to refer back to something I heard, (or possibly made up, I don't know which) that has become my life motto.

"Smile and be happy, the whole world smiles at you."

Instead of wishing for the worst, try hoping for the best. There's nothing I hate more than when people wish misfortune on others.

Not only should you want the best out of life for yourself, but you should not feel threatened or angered by the success of others.

You should encourage the success of others so you too can share in their happiness. When your time comes and you achieve your goals, take the time to enjoy the moment and remember how it feels. The feeling is contagious and leaves you longing for more.

I hope to return to this page one last time, but if the opportunity does not present itself then it is at least an opportunity for someone else. I wish everyone at the Gateway staff continued success and my undying gratitude. You have made my stay at UNO most pleasurable.

For everyone else on campus, I hope I have been able to stir your emotions and intellect whether you agree or not.

It is my job as a columnist to get you to think, it is your job in life to make something of yourself that you can be proud of.

I hope you make it.

Give Us Quality, Not Hokey Ads

We're lazy. We're bitter. We're unfocused, wear flannel and worship the bloody head of Kurt Cobain. We watch MTV instead of news and according to Budweiser, the burning philosophical question of our time is, "Who's hotter — Ginger or Mary Ann?"

We also spend approximately $125 billion a year on consumer products according to a recent Roper poll.

We're the tired, the poor, the huddled masses yearning to breathe free — the new "lost generation" born between 1966 and 1977 — and advertisers think they've finally found the formula to pick our pockets.

Over the past year, advertisers have discovered we're making a few extra pennies at our "McJobs" and suddenly Madison Avenue has a whole new market to conquer. They're taking aim at our wallets with new and improved adspeak, the anti-hype hype and the guided tour down memory lane.

You can almost hear the corporate board meetings where the new "Generation X" advertising campaigns were dreamed up:

"These kids today, they're hip to hype. Let's give them real life, real products and tons of cultural references from the golden days of yore, '70s TV."

These are the geniuses who have given us the utterly convincing slogan, "I've been lied to my whole life by ads. I don't want the hype, I drink Sprite because it tastes good."

They've summoned the ghosts of sitcoms past and asked us to once again dream of Jeannie. They're forcefeeding us Gilligan and the Skipper too and asking us hearken back to the groovy tunes of Peter Frampton.

Once we were ordinary people. Once we were individuals. Now we're a marketing group.

The fact is, there are about 47 million of us between the ages of 17 and 28 and no matter what the marketing demographers say, we are not a homogeneous group of cynical, aimless slackers with notoriously short attention spans.

Yes, some of us dress with all the flair of Fred Sanford and some of us are forced to move back home after we graduate from Harvard Medical School and can't get a job at the local 7-11.

But most of us don't.

Most of us are individuals who resent being labeled. A lot of us wish the media would stop casting all 47 million of us into the same mold.

And if there is just one thing that truly does define our generation, it's that we've all been raised on advertising. We've learned to deconstruct its messages.

If marketers think they're fooling us with "truth" in advertising campaigns that insult our intelligence and nostalgia fests that make us look like cultural illiterates, they're sadly mistaken.

We all know that one way or another they're just trying to sell us something.

Personally, I'd prefer that they came out and said so, instead of condescending to me with some 40-year-old executive's vision of what American youth is all about.

Don't give me grungy losers reminiscing about Peter Brady's fake mustache or try to dupe me into believing you're not really selling anything.

Just show me value, and I will buy.

'UNOmaha Racers'

Dear Editor,

The recent resignation of basketball coach Bob Hanson has given UNO a great opportunity. Instead of hiring another basketball coach and continuing in the same old fashion, UNO should affiliate with the Omaha Racers and become the first college in the country to have its own professional athletic team.

They could be called the UNOmaha Racers. This move would save the university both time and money, and it would provide basketball at a higher level than we will ever see in the North Central Conference. It also would answer the critics who say that college sports are really professional sports in disguise and that they exploit college athletes for the advantage of the college or university.

I do not know exactly how such an affiliation would work, but I do not believe that Steve and Sheri Idelman would mind having another two or three thousand people in the stands for each Racers' game. Even if they did get a student discount on tickets, students would more than make up for that at the concession stand. Maybe UNO could provide the cheer squad for the Racers and half-time might include some entertainment suitable for college students — belching contests, for example.

As college athletics become more and more professional, UNO could set the pace by adopting a professional basketball team. Who knows, some day we might even have our very own professional football team, the UNOmaha Pine Trees, in the Canadian Football League.

"will it hit?" but "when will it hit?" she said.

Brown said she was fortunate her cancer was detected early enough to be successfully treated. Among black women, the mortality rate from breast cancer is high, Brown said, because the disease isn't diagnosed early enough for successful treatment.

"Among African-American women, breast cancer is a lonely disease," she said, "not to be shared or discussed."

Brown said her organization works to educate women about breast cancer, especially women of color and women in low income groups.

"Breast cancer respects neither color, nor age, nor status," she said.

Brown called for "prevention activism" and for consistent and reliable information about breast cancer from the medical and scientific communities, as well as from the federal government.

"Our belief in science is tempered in how it is conducted and applied to us," she said. "We don't expect science to be perfect, but we do expect it to be honest."

Women are often baffled by contradicting studies about breast cancer and mammograms, Brown said. No one seems to know at what age women should begin to have a mammogram, how often to get one or if they are even safe, she said.

"We are starting to make our voices and issues heard," Brown said. "The scientific community will see an angry group of women unleashed."

Brown told women to be active in making decisions about their health, to take advantage of information and treatment methods available now and to push science for continued advancements in the treatment of breast cancer.

"We may not be winning the war on breast cancer as fast as possible," she said, "but women of all color are ready to fight to make this war history."

Lady Mavs Sweep NW Missouri St.

By DAVE BORYCA

The UNO women's softball team proved the reasoning behind its NCAA Division II ranking of fifth by sweeping a pair of games from Northwest Missouri State Thursday at Claussen-Westgate Field.

In the first game, the Lady Mavs overwhelmed the Bearcats 9-1. Senior Deb Baetsle led three Lady Mavs with two hits by collecting a single and a double and had four RBIs. Freshmen Toni Novak and Kerri Semrad each had two singles.

The Lady Mavs scored four runs in the fifth inning on three walks and two hits. Freshman pitcher Jenni Upenicks recorded her 10th complete game by giving up only four singles to improve her record to 9-1.

In the second game, UNO pounded out 16 hits to win again decisively 11-0. Baetsle and Upenicks led six Lady Mavs by smashing three hits each. Pitcher Tracy Carey gave up two singles to improve her record to 17-5.

Coach Mary Yori said she was pleased with UNO's performance against the Bearcats.

"It went very well," Yori said. "The players did a nice job. It's good getting two wins just before you have a weekend off."

UNO, 41-6 on the season and 6-0 in the North Central Conference, will be on the road next week when they travel to Morningside Tuesday and to Wayne State on Wednesday.

Yori said defeating Morningside would be a big win for the Lady Mavs.

"If we can split with Morningside, we'll be (first) in the division," Yori said. "If we can sweep them, we have a good chance of getting the number one seed going into the conference tournament."

Another big win for the Lady Mavs was the recent signing of four all-state players, two from Nebraska and two from Iowa.

Annessa Conrad from Carlisle, Iowa, is a centerfielder who batted .490 as a junior. She was a second Iowa all-State selection and was named to the Class 2-A all-state first team.

"Anessa is very quick, very fast," Yori said. "Of the four, she is probably the best athlete in a physical sense."

The second Lady Mav will be DeAnn Hanisch from Sloan, Iowa. Hanisch is a pitcher who went 65-18 during her high school career. She earned first team all-Northwest Iowa honors and was named to the elite special-mention all-state team.

"DeAnn throws harder than any of the pitchers we have right now," Yori said. "She's going to add a new dimension to our pitching staff."

Laura Adams from Papillion will be another new Lady Mav this fall. Adams was a two-time first team all-state utility player at Papillion-LaVista High School. She played for the Omaha Softball Association's Omaha Sonix.

"She's going to bring a good stick to our lineup," Yori said. "Laura has the potential to really help us out with hitting."

Mindy Hahne will be the final addition to UNO. From Omaha Gross High School, Hahne is a two-time all-state shortstop. She led her team to the 1992 state championship and a runner-up finish in 1993.

"Mindy is going to be a super softball player," Yori said. "She's a very hard worker who's intensely focused on the game."

The four new recruits will be the final ones for next season's team. Yori said she was pleased with the results of this year's recruiting.

"I'm very excited about the addition of these four players," Yori said. "I feel confident in their ability to fill the holes at first and third base that will be vacated by seniors Deb Baetsle and Michala Lehotak. I also feel that the increase in pitching depth will be a big plus."

Mav Coach Signs All-State Wrestler

By DAVE BORYCA

UNO wrestling Coach Mike Denney has signed Erin Daugherty, a two-time Minnesota state champion wrestler, who will transfer from the University of Minnesota to attend UNO this fall.

Daugherty, who will wrestle at 142 or 150 pounds for the Mavericks, is from Osseo, Minn. He has a 116-10-1 record under Coach Doug Sidihel at Totino Grace High School. Daugherty was 22-8-1 as a freshman, then finished second in the state meet at 119 pounds with a 28-2 sophomore record before winning 66 straight matches to win state titles in 1990 at 125 pounds and in 1991 at 130.

Daugherty is a two-time junior freestyle all-American and also finished third in the junior world trials. In addition to his state championships, he also won the prestigious Christmas tournament in Minnesota twice.

Daugherty redshirted one year and competed one season at Minnesota. He will have three seasons of eligibility remaining with the Mavericks.

"Erin is a good one," Denney said. "I'm really happy to have him in our program, and I think he can add a lot to our team immediately. He's going to have a big impact on our conference."

Denney said Daugherty's transfer from Minnesota was due to dissatisfaction on his part.

"Things just didn't quite work out for him in Minnesota," Denney said. "He wanted a new opportunity, and I think we can give him that here."

Denney predicted that Daugherty would be able to provide the Mavericks with some additional expertise and leadership.

"He's bringing in a lot of experience from a top program," Denney said. "And he still has three years of eligibility."

Despite the addition of Daugherty, Denney said the Mavericks were still looking for more recruits to add to the program.

"We're still working on it," Denney said. "Mostly we're trying to get athletes to walk on due to our small recruiting budget. We just don't have that much to offer them."

The Mavericks finished third in this spring's NCAA Division II national meet and will have six former all-Americans in the lineup next season. Because of this, Denney said, the number of scholarships UNO can offer to potential wrestlers is low.

"We have little money because of an experienced team," Denney said. "Despite that, we're going to try and sign up the best quality athletes possible."

Currently, the UNO grapplers are on their off-season training program.

"The guys are mostly working with weights," Denney said. "This May, we're going to have several of them go down to the Olympic Training Center and work out with some of the top trainers and coaches in the country."

Mavs Sweep NCC Rival

By DAVE BORYCA

This weekend was one of mixed emotions for the UNO baseball team.

It started Friday when Coach Bob Gates and the Mavericks dropped both games in a home doubleheader against Midland Lutheran 13-3 and 13-9. Both losses were stemmed by seven-run innings by Midland.

Mike Whitten and Doug Thompson were the losing pitchers for the Mavericks. Offensively, the only home run of the day for UNO came in the second game from junior Mike Ripa.

"That's the worst ball I've ever seen played in 18 years," Gates said. "We looked pretty pitiful."

The Mavericks stayed home Saturday to host conference rival Morningside in an afternoon doubleheader. UNO swept the Chiefs 13-10 and 4-3.

"I didn't know how the guys were going to handle Friday's losses," Gates said. "Maybe the guys needed to get whipped good. They really came back and played tough against Morningside."

In the first game, Mike Sullivan pounded out a three-run homer in the sixth inning. Sullivan's key hit began a rally from five runs down.

Dave Vallinch had the win with Troy Charf getting the save.

In the second game, things looked bleak for the Mavericks as they trailed 3-1 in the last inning. With Joe Daneff, Tim Hallett and Sullivan leading the bases, pinch-hitter Ripa brought in Daneff.

Greg Geary then singled to bring Hallett home, keeping the bases loaded. One out later, Vallinch singled to bring in Sullivan and win the game.

Ethan Anderson had the second win of the day for UNO, holding the Chiefs to six hits in seven innings.

The Mavericks then capped the weekend by splitting in another doubleheader against Morningside in Sioux City, Iowa. UNO won the first game 16-8, then dropped the second 3-2.

Jeff Van Every was the starting pitcher for the Mavs in the first game, but the win went to Charf with four innings of play. Offensively, the Mavericks were led by Sullivan with a home run and 2 RBIs, Hallett with three doubles and 2 RBIs and Craig Worley with 2 RBIs.

"The first game we hit the heck out of the ball," Gates said. "I was pleased that we were able to get 12 hits that game."

Gates said the offensive power of the Mavs was a key factor in winning the third crucial game in the series against Morningside.

"The first two games against Morningside we had to come back," Gates said. "This time we got ahead and stayed ahead."

The second game's loss went to Brian Drake. Gates said the loss wasn't due to problems with pitching.

"Drake took the loss, but he pitched pretty well," Gates said. "We just didn't get any hits to back him up."

Only the first three games between conference opponents count on the conference record of a team. With the Maverick's wins against Morningside, UNO jumps to 3-3 in the conference season.

Despite this weekend's losses, Gates said he was pleased overall with the performance of the UNO team.

"This was a good weekend for us," Gates said. "The guys played tough when it counted."

Next up for the Mavs will be a twin bill against Briar Cliff College on Wednesday at College World Series Park. The next conference opponent for the Mavs will be Augustana on April 30 in another home doubleheader.

UNO Fares Well in Meet

By KENT CROSSLEY

The UNO Lady Mav track team, ranked 10th in the NCAA Division II Power Ratings, overcame a number of obstacles to post a satisfying performance at the Kansas Relays this past weekend.

"We did pretty well considering some of the miscommunications and mishaps," Coach Tim Hendricks said.

Eight UNO athletes competed in the Kansas Relays, while the remaining squad competed in the Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational.

Although the conditions were hot and windy, UNO's 300-meter relay team managed to post a third-place finish, and school record time of 1 minute, 45.58 seconds.

The Lady Mav runners were Linda Vondras, Sue Del Castillo, Heather Haines and Kim Osler.

Hendricks said he was satisfied with the relay team's performance, and freshman Heather Haines has been improving.

"Once she learns to relax, we really expect her to break through," Hendricks said.

Vondras, who also took first in the long jump with a leap of 18 feet, 5 1/2 inches, re-injured her foot and was forced to miss the 100-meters and 4X100.

Osler finished second in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 14.39 seconds, but was unhappy with her result.

"When we got there, the preliminaries were canceled and all we had left were the finals," Osler said. "It didn't give us any chances to run a good time."

Del Castillo placed second in the triple jump, but finished a disappointing fifth in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 14.90.

"Del Castillo barely got her sixth jump in when she had to go to run the 100-meter hurdles," Hendricks said. "That triple jump definitely takes some spring out of your legs."

The Lady Mavs could have had a rewarding performance in the mile-relay if it hadn't been for another mishap.

Three runners collided at the second baton exchange, causing UNO's second runner, Barb Keefover, to fall. Although Keefover was able to make the hand-off to Jennifer Raemakers, another runner clipped the back of Raemakers' shoe.

"That was just one of those things, but we have been pretty fortunate not to have had any collisions up to this point," Hendricks said.

Meanwhile, Mary Ann Wieberg finished first in the 800 meters at the Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational with a time of 2 minutes 19.1 seconds.

Hendricks said he took the eight athletes to the Kansas Relays because it provided "much stiffer" competition.

audience's attention.

The two used their own personal methods to train, but both agreed that reading and practicing a piece repeatedly was one key to their success.

Being persistent helped her, McKnight said. "None of us ever started out winning, but we stuck it out," McKnight said. "You learn more and more by sticking it out."

Although forensics is a competitive activity, the "competition" is unlike any other, according to McKnight.

"All the teams are friends and we all help each other," she said. "It's like one big family."

"The majority of your competitors are very supportive of you," Jones said. "There's a lot of camaraderie."

McKnight and Jones said becoming involved in forensics has been beneficial to them.

"I've gained so much confidence in communication," Jones said. "It will help me in the long run in my teaching. One of the best choices in my life was to do intercollegiate forensics."

McKnight, who plans to get her masters' degree in communication, said because of forensics, she learned a lot about communicating.

"If you can communicate your ideas effectively, there are no boundaries to where you can go with your life."
